Abuse and Neglect

While many of us are surrounded by positive environments, not everyone is as lucky. Children and the elderly are the most prone to being trapped in hostile environments because they often have a harder time advocating for themselves. As you explore your communities, pay attention to the signs that a child or elderly citizen is being abused or neglected and report it!

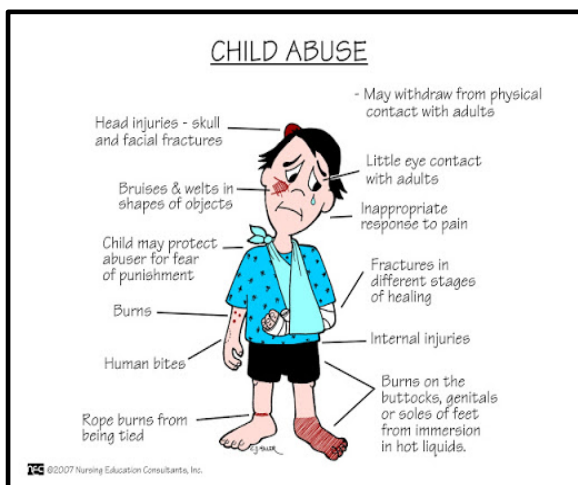

What is Abuse?

Abuse can be physical, sexual, or emotional. Child abuse is as an act or failure to act on the part of a parent or guardian that results in the physical or emotional harm, sexual abuse, exploitation, or death of a child. Senior citizens in abusive situations are subject to the same types of abuse as children.

Physical Abuse

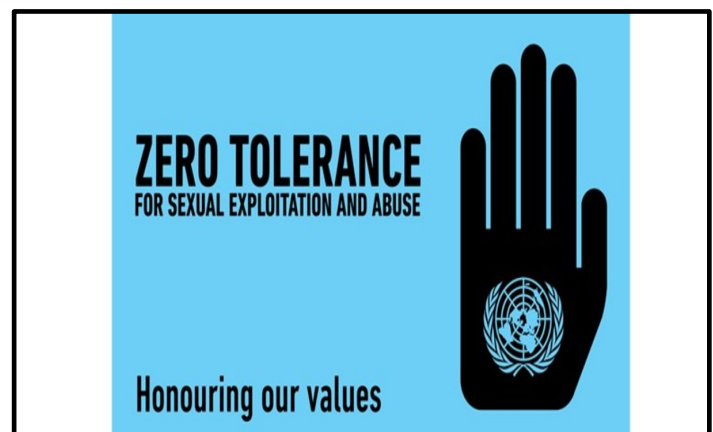

Occurs when a child or elder is being purposely physically injured or put at risk of harm by another person. Signs and symptoms of physical abuse are unexplained injuries, such as bruises, fractures or burns.

Another sign could include a caregiver's refusal to allow you to see the elder alone.

Sexual Abuse

For Children signs of sexual abuse include excessive knowledge of sexual acts beyond their age range, not wanting to be left alone with certain people and unwillingness to remove clothing around others at bath time or when needing to change. Other signs include change in eating habits, decrease in self-confidence and loss of interest in hobbies they previously enjoyed doing.

For the elderly, sexual abuse includes any sexual contact with an elder who, because of mental illness or dementia, cannot communicate their disapproval of the behavior against them or cannot communicate consent for the activity.

Emotional Abuse

For children it can be a parent or other adult in the household swearing at, insulting, putting down, humiliating, or acting in a way that made the child afraid that they might be physically hurt.

* Signs and symptoms include a child's loss of self-confidence or self-esteem when asked to speak. When a child is desperately trying to seek affection, it may be to counteract ongoing emotional abuse.

*A child may also socially withdraw or have a loss of interest or enthusiasm in the hobbies they used to find enjoyable.

Emotional abuse for the Elderly is also common. Threatening, belittling, or controlling caregiver behaviors are some of the most common forms of caregiver abuse. Behavior from the elder is suddenly mimicking dementia, to include, rocking or mumbling to themselves.

What is Neglect?

Neglect is a form of mistreatment resulting from inadequate attention, especially through carelessness or disregard for the needs of others. Neglect is the failure to provide a minimum standard of care for physical and emotional needs.

Signs and Symptoms of Child Neglect

Signs may include a child having poor hygiene and lack of clothing or supplies to meet physical needs. Additional indicators may include, hiding food for later, poor record of school attendance, lack of appropriate attention for medical, dental or psychological problems. If a child is displaying unusual behavior, such as, taking food or money without permission, consider why the child may be doing so.

Types of Neglect Elders can experience

Emotional Neglect - includes causing emotional pain, distress or anguish by ignoring, belittling or infantilizing the needs of the adult.

Physical Neglect - includes failing to attend to a person's medical, hygienic, nutrition and dietary needs, such as dispensing medications, changing bandages, bathing, grooming, dressing, or failure to provide ample food to maintain health.

Financial Neglect - involves disregarding a person's financial obligations such as failing to pay rent or mortgage, medical insurance or invoices, utility and garbage bills, property taxes and assessments.

Abandonment - involves deserting the caregiving needs of an individual while neglecting to arrange sufficient care and support for the duration of the absence.
